Social and Personal

Yes and No. Yes and No.
Tes and No were newly married
When their quarrel began,
Every scheme Yes advocated
No would spoil the plan:
Tes was always out for pleasure,
No was always not—
Bo, 'twas hard to tell which of them
Had the harder lot.

Many years they kept on quarrelling,
Till Yes asked one day,
"Would you scorn a thousand dollars?"
And No answered "Nay,"
80, Yes took the hint, and always

Afterwards asked so:
"Would you mind, my darling, going?"
And she'd answer, "No"

He roared out the catch in a harsh, unmusical voice, and ended with a shout of laughter. "I trust that I am a better bowman than a minetrel," said he.
"Methinks I have some remembrance of the lilt." remarked me gleeman, running his lingers over the strings. "Hoping that it will give thee no offence, most holy sir"—with a viclous snap at Alegne—and with the kind permit of the company, I will even venture upon it."
Many a time in the after days Alleyne Eddrison seemed to see that scene, for all that so many which were stranger and mare stirring were soon to crowd upon him. The fat, red-faced gleeman, the listening group, the arche with upraised finger beating in time to the music and the huge sprawling fixure of Hordle John, all thrown into red light and black shadow by the flickering fire in the centremenory was to come often lovingly back to it. At the time he was lost in admitation at the deft way in which the jongleur disguised the loss of his two missing strings, and the lusty, hearty fashion in which he trolled out his little ballad of the outland bowmen, which ran in some such fashion as this:

What of the bow?

What of the bow?
The bow was made in England;
Of true wood, of yew wood,
The wood of English hows;
So men who are free
Love the old yew tree
And the land where the yew-free grows

What of the cord?

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

SUBJECT: Israel Reproved-Amos v: 4-15. GOLDEN TEXT: "Seek ye the Lord and ye shall live."-

By Rev. J. E. Gilbert, D. D., Secretary American Society of Religious Education.

CONTEXT.—Jeroboam II. began to reign in Israel in 802 B. C., seventy years after the translation of Biljah, as studied last week. Elisha and other prophets fulfilled their mission and passed away. Then came a class of irregular men, those whom God called by Ilis sprift from various avocations—men who fiad no training in the schools, and who on that account were more responsive to the Holy Spirit. Having less of the human, they had more of these was Amos, from whose book we study to-day. One of the carliest, if not the earliest of this class. He had been a herdman of Tekea (Amos, i: 1), mentioned in carlier history. (2 Samuel, xiv: 2). He left his secular pursuit for a time at least and a men with burning zent to deliver a message from God to the wayward people of Judah and Israel, both kingdons being regarded as of the chosen people of his book, with a passage that pertains to SECURTIYA— of Israel.

SECURTIYA— of Israel.

SECURTIYA— of Israel.

SECURTIYA— of Israel.

The rulers were ill at ease, not knowing when or how trouble, intrigue and rebellion might come. The thoughtful were looking in various directions for grounds of security. It was an opportune moment for the prophet to utter words of comfort. This he did, delivering God's message and declaring that there was but one way to national order, peace and prosperity, and that was to return to the loyal service of God. The wise men had set forth this doctrine centuries before (Proverbs, xiv: 3i), but it seems to have been forgotten. "Seek ye Me and ye shall find" was God's word to a rebelious people—a call to give up their idos and their sins, to return to their idd alleglance and seek in all security the favor and protection of the Almighty. It was the same teaching that was delivered subsequently by one of the most influential of the prophets. (Isalah, iv: 3).

DANGER.—(Verses 5 and 6.) Overagainst every promise there is a warning. The latter is quite as necessary as the former. Life is made up of alternatives to be chosen. There hung over the nation the to turn to idols for national delease; How evidently wise to seek the Lord, who is almighty.

PERVERSITY.—(Verse 10). There is next an abrupt transition in the prophet's thought, After dealing in general terms with the conditions of national security and prosperity, urging all to trust Jehovah. Amos proceeds to exhibit the deplorable condition into which the poople had fallen. They not only treated one another unjustly, but they hated the officers of justice, who sought to punish for wrong-doing. Every civil case was adjusted by elders, who sat in the gate of the city and heard witnesses. Buth iv: 11), and the verdict was entitled to respect as much as are the decisions of our courts. But these judges were hated and the witnesses who gave true testimony were abhorred simply because by this method the guilty were punished. In like manner the faithful teachers of religion were dispised, even as the King of israel regarded Micainh, and esteemethis man of God rebuked the monarch for his sins. This spirit marked the low deaths of depraytry, the surprising perhim an enemy (I Kings xxii: 8), because this man of God rebuked the monarchior his sins. This spirit marked the low depths of depravity, the surprising perversity, into which Israel had fallen, from which Amos would deliver. — JUDGMENT—(Verse II). Every evil deed brings upon the offender its own appropriate penalty. (Heb. ii: 2). Retribution is certain under every system of

The cord was made in England:

To the English flax

And the land where the hemp was wove

To the gray goose feather And the land where the gray goose flew.

What of the men?
The men were red in England;
The bowman—the yeoman—
The lads of dale and fell.
Here's to you—and to you!
To the hearts that are true
And the land where the true hearts dwell.

The shaft was cut in England:
A long shaft a strong shaft,
Barbed and trim and true;
So we'll drink all together

A rough cord, a tough cord, A cord that bowmen love; So we'll drain our jacks

What of the shaft? The shaft was cut tablished, to pervert and corrupt the people whom it was expected to serve-all this was known to the Almighty. He beheld it as a constant exhibit of the public sin (Heb. i: 13).

EXHORTATION.—t. erses 14, 15.) The foregoing led the prophet by a very natural line of thought to exhort the people to a better life. That was the one point he had in view from beginning to end. In every word of censure spoken, in every exposure of wrong-doing, there is always the possibility and the hope of reform. Because of what had been said "seek good and not evil." This is the same old pleading of all the prophets (Isa. i: 16, 17.) What a strange advice is this! One might think is wholly unnecessary. It ought to be expected that goodness would be attractive and that all would on that account embrace it, and that evil would be repulsive and that all would on that account forsake it. How strange that one must cry out to save another from ruin. The prophet accompany his exhortation by words of promise and hope. "The Lord shall be with you." Sin had separated them from God. (Isa. lit?.) Cast the sin away and his gracious favor would return. Then the small remnant of Joseph—that is, of Joseph's descendants—might be spared to act a noble part in the national history.

SUMMARY.—1. This lesson exhibits man as free to be and to do according to his own, pleasure. No force is employed to compel anyone to any course of action. The appeal is to the judgment and to the conscience. 2. This freedom may be abused, resulting in a life injurious to men and dishonoring God, surprising procedure on the part of an intelligent being. 3. Such use of one's freedom in opposition to the Divine will and destructive of human happiness does not expose one to the immediate consequences. The forbearance of God is displayed in many attempts to recover the cring. 4. The way of return is simple and easy, the same always and everywhere. It is only necessary to break of that which is evil and to engage in that which is evil and to engage in that which is evil and to

They are from the South French, every one, upon whom I have been making war. By my hilt! camarades, I think that I may let my plunder speak for itself."

"It seems indeed to be a goodly service," said the tooth-drawer.

"Tote bleu! yes, indeed. Then there is the chance of a ransom. Why, look you, in the affair at Brignais some four years back, when the companies slew James of Bourbon, and put his army to the sword, there was try lout newly brought over, while the English fleas still hopping under his doublet, lad his great hands upon the Sicur Amaury de Chatonville, who owns half. Pleardy, and had five thousand crowns out of him, with his horse and harness. The true that a French wench took it all off Peter as quick as the Frenchman paid it; but what then? By the twang of string! it would be a bad thing if money was not made to be spent; and how better than on woman—eh, ma belle?"

And the land where the true hearts dwell.

"Well sung, by my hilt!" shouted the archer in high delight. "Many a night have I heard that song, both in the old war-time and after in the days of the White Company," when Black Simon of Norwich would lead the stave, and four hundred of the best bowmen that ever drew string would come rearing in upon the chorus. I have seen old John Hawkwood, the same who has led half the Company into Italy, stand laughing in his beard as he heard it, until his plates rattled again, But to get the full smack of it ye must yourselves be English bowmen, and be far off upon an outland soil."

Whist the song had been singing Dame Eliza and the maid had placed a board across two trestles, and had laid upon it the knife, the spoon, the sail, the tranchor of bread, and finally the smoking dish which held the savory supper. The archer settled himself to it like one who had known what it was to find good food scarce; but his tongue still went as merrily as his teeth.

"It passes me," he cried, "how all you lusty fellows can bida scratching your backs at home when there are such durings over the soas. Look at me-what have I to do? It is but the eye to the cord, the cord to the shaft, and the shaft to the mark. There is the whole song of it. It is but what you do yourselves for pleasure upon a Sunday evening at the parish village butts."

"And the wage" asked a laborer.

"You see what the wage brings." he spent; and how better than on womanch, ma belle?"

"It would indeed be a bad thing if we had not our brave archers to bring wealth and kindly customs into the country," quoth Dame Eliza, on whom the soldier's free and open ways had made a deep impression.

"A tol, ma cherie!" said he, with his hand over his heart, "Hola! there is la petite peoping from behind the door. A tol, aussi, ma petite! Mon Dieul but the lass has a good color!"

"There is one thing, fair sir," said the Cambridge student in his piping voice, "which I would fon that you would make more clear. As I understand it, there was peace made at the town of Bretigny some six years back batween our most gracious monarch and the King of the French. This being so, it seems most passing strange that you should talk so loudly of war and of companies when there is no quarrel between the French and us."

"Meaning that I lie," said the archer, laying down his knife.

"May heaven forfond!" cried the student hastily, "Magna est veritas sed rara, which means in the Latin longue that archers are all honorable men.
